

Introduction:

In this data analysis, we examined a dataset containing information about various services. Our goal was to gain insights and explore different aspects of the data. We started by exploring the distribution of services by city or province, understanding the types of audiences these services cater to, and analyzing the classification of services. We then assessed service availability by examining operational hours. Additionally, we identified services that are open the longest hours and those that operate over the weekend. Finally, we performed text mining to find common words in the service descriptions.

In [1]: import pandas as pd
import json

Open the GeoJSON file
with open('mental-health.geojson') as file:
    data = json.load(file)

In [2]: # Display the keys in the data data.keys()
```

```
Out[2]: dict_keys(['type', 'name', 'features'])

The GeoJSON file contains two keys: 'type' and 'features'. The 'type' key usually specifies the type of the GeoJSON object, and the 'features' key contains a list of Feature objects.

Let's explore the 'features' key to understand the structure of the data. We will examine the first feature for now.

In [3]: # Display the keys in the first feature data['features'][0].keys()
```

```
Out[3]: dict_keys(['type', 'geometry', 'properties'])
```

Each feature in the GeoJSON file has three keys: 'type', 'geometry', and 'properties'.

- The 'type' key indicates that this is a Feature object.
- The 'geometry' key contains the geographical data, which could be a Point, LineString, Polygon, etc., along with the coordinates.
- The 'properties' key contains additional information or attributes related to each feature.

Let's inspect the 'geometry' and 'properties' keys of the first feature to understand what kind of information they contain.

The 'geometry' key for the first feature contains a 'Point' type and its corresponding coordinates. This indicates the geographical point where this feature is located.

The 'properties' key contains several attributes related to the feature. Here is a summary of some of them:

- 'MHSU_GUID': A unique identifier for the feature.
- 'GPCE_TAXONOMY_CLASSIFICATION': Categories classifying the feature.
- 'AUDIENCE': The audience this feature caters to.
- 'STUDENTS': A flag indicating if this caters to students.
- 'TAXONOMY_NAME': Another form of categorization.
- 'RG_NAME': Name of the health authority.
- 'SV_NAME': Name of the services provided.
- 'SV_DESCRIPTION': Description of the services provided.
- 'PHONE_NUMBER', 'WEBSITE', 'EMAIL_ADDRESS': Contact information.
- 'WHEELCHAIR_ACCESSIBLE': A flag indicating if the place is wheelchair accessible.
- 'LANGUAGE': The languages spoken (empty in this case).
- 'HOURS': Operational hours.
- 'STREET_NUMBER', 'CITY', 'PROVINCE', 'POSTAL_CODE': Address information.
- 'LATITUDE', 'LONGITUDE': Geographical coordinates (replicated from the 'geometry' key).
- 'MHSU_SPECIFIC_TERMS_ENHANCED_SEARCH', 'KEYWORD_SEARCH_TEXT': Text fields possibly used for search functionality.

Now that we have an understanding of the data structure, we can convert it into a format more suitable for analysis, like a pandas DataFrame. Let's do that next.

In [5]: import pandas as pd

Extract properties for each feature and put it in a list properties_list = [feature['properties'] for feature in data['features']]

Create pandas DataFrame from the list
df = pd.DataFrame(properties_list)

Display the first few rows of the DataFrame
df.head()

Lets start our analysis by understanding the distribution of services by city or province.

In [6]: # Count the number of services by province services_by_province = df['PROVINCE'].value_counts()

Count the number of services by city
services_by_city = df['CITY'].value_counts()

services_by_province, services_by_city
```

```
Out[6]: (BC      4087

        Elkford         1
        Name: CITY, Length: 181, dtype: int64)

The distribution of services by province is as follows:

- British Columbia (BC): 4087 services
- Unknown province: 324 services

Please note that there are 324 services for which the province is not specified.

The distribution of most services by city is as follows:

- Vancouver: 429 services
- Burnaby: 226 services

We can visualize this.

In [7]: import matplotlib.pyplot as plt

Set plot sizes
plt.rcParams['figure.figsize'] = [10, 5]

Plot for services by province
plt.subplot(1, 2, 1)
services_by_province.plot(kind='bar', color='skyblue') plt.title('Distribution of Services by Province') plt.xlabel('Province')
plt.ylabel('Number of Services')

Plot for top 10 cities by number of services
plt.subplot(1, 2, 2)
services_by_city[:10].plot(kind='bar', color='skyblue') plt.title('Top 10 Cities by Number of Services') plt.xlabel('City')
plt.ylabel('Number of Services')

Display the plots
plt.tight_layout()
plt.show()

Here are the bar charts visualizing the distribution of services by province and city:

- The first chart shows the number of services in each province. Most of the services are in British Columbia (BC), with a few services for which the province is not specified.
- The second chart shows the top 10 cities by the number of services. Vancouver has the highest number of services, followed by Victoria and Surrey. There are also a few services for which the city is not specified.

Now lets find out the types of audiences these services being provided.

In [8]: # Split the 'AUDIENCE' column into separate rows audience_df = df['AUDIENCE'].str.split('|', expand=True).stack().reset_index(level=-1, drop=True)

Count the number of services for each audience type audience_counts = audience_df.value_counts()

audience_counts

```
Out[8]: Adults          4019
Children and Youth    3894
Students             2304
dtype: int64
```

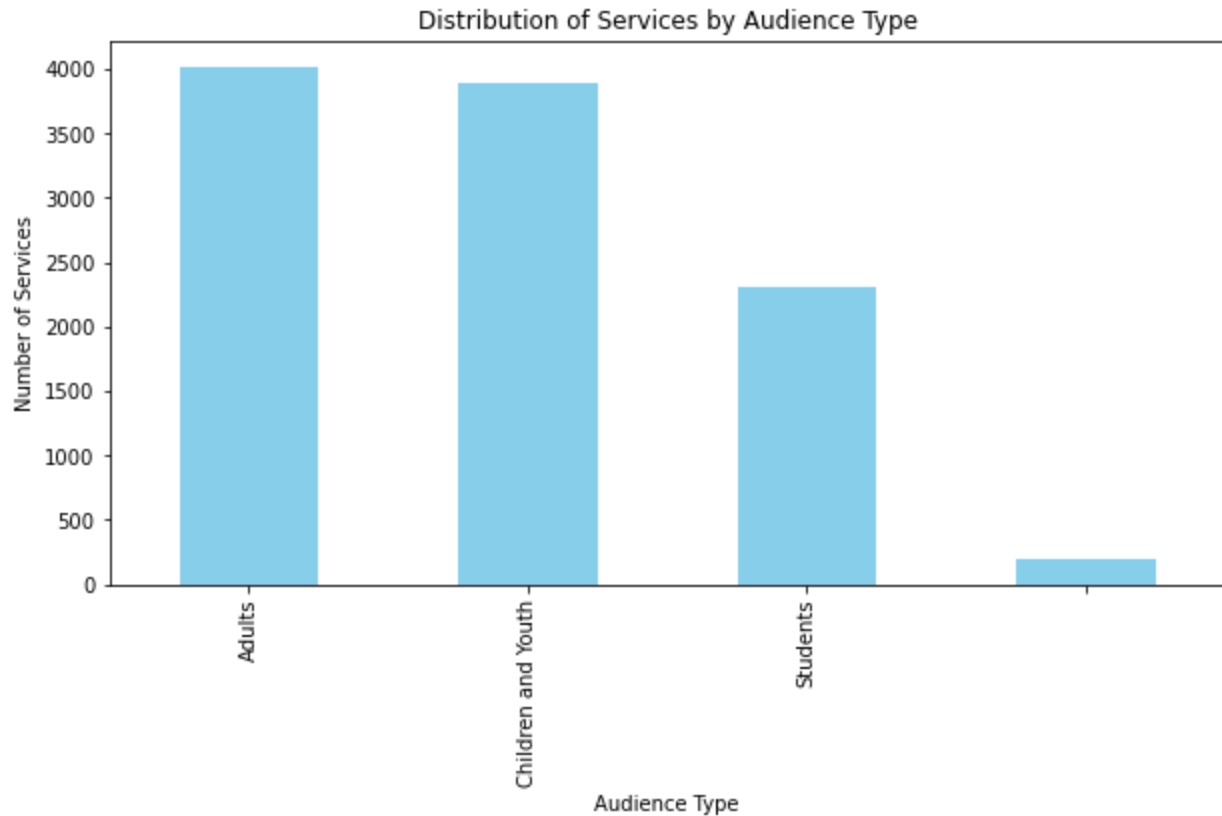

The types of audiences that these services cater to and their counts are as follows:

- Adults: 4019 services
- Children and Youth: 3894 services
- Students: 2304 services This means that most services cater to adults and children/youth, with fewer services specifically for students.

Let's visualize this data for better understanding.

In [9]: # Plot for audience types audience_counts.plot(kind='bar', color='skyblue') plt.title('Distribution of Services by Audience Type') plt.xlabel('Audience Type')

```
plt.ylabel('Number of Services')
plt.show()
```

Now lets find out what type of services are they getting.

In [10]: # Split the 'GPCE_TAXONOMY_CLASSIFICATION' column into separate rows classification_df = df['GPCE_TAXONOMY_CLASSIFICATION'].str.split('|', expand=True).stack()

Count the number of services for each classification
classification_counts = classification_df.value_counts()

classification_counts

Out[10]: Alcohol Addictions and Other Substances    2557

In [11]: # Plot for classification types classification_counts.plot(kind='bar', color='skyblue') plt.title('Distribution of Services by Classification Type') plt.xlabel('Classification Type') plt.ylabel('Number of Services')
plt.show()
```

This means that most services are categorized under 'Alcohol Addictions and Other Substances'. Lets look at the service availability or the operational hours.

In [12]: # Check unique values for 'HOURS' column unique_hours = df['HOURS'].unique() unique_hours

Analyzing this data can be a bit complex due to its textual nature and the various formats used. To analyze the data, we need to parse it into a more structured format that can be processed computationally.

weekend_services, round_the_clock_services

Out[13]: (288, 4)

The initial analysis provides the following insights:

- There are 288 services that operate over the weekend (either Saturday or Sunday).
- There is 4 service that operates 24/7 (as indicated by the phrase "open 24 hours" in its 'HOURS' field).

These results suggest that the services largely revolve around health, especially mental health, and include treatment, counselling, and support for individuals.

Categorical Data Analysis:

For categorical variables, we could perform Chi-square tests of independence to understand the relationship between different categorical variables.

To perform a Chi-square test of independence or create cross-tabulations, we first need to identify the categorical variables in our dataset. In the dataset we have, the following columns could be considered as categorical:

- GPCE_TAXONOMY_CLASSIFICATION

- AUDIENCE
- RG_NAME
- WEEKEND_SERVICE
- 24_7_SERVICE
- WHEELCHAIR_ACCESSIBLE
- LANGUAGE
- CITY
- PROVINCE

We can choose two of these categorical variables and create a cross-tabulation. For example, we might be interested in understanding the relationship between PROVINCE and WEEKEND_SERVICE (whether a service is available on weekends). We can also perform a Chi-square test of independence on this cross-tabulation to statistically test if there is a significant relationship between these two variables.

Let's perform these analyses. We'll start by creating a cross-tabulation of PROVINCE and WEEKEND_SERVICE.

In [20]: # Create a cross-tabulation of 'PROVINCE' and 'WEEKEND_SERVICE' cross_tab = pd.crosstab(df['PROVINCE'], df['WEEKEND_SERVICE'])

cross_tab

Out[20]: WEEKEND_SERVICE  False  True
```

		324	0
	BC	3799	288

This table shows that there are 324 services in an unnamed province that do not operate on weekends. In BC, there are 3799 services that do not operate on weekends and 288 services that do.

Now let's perform a Chi-square test of independence to statistically test if there is a significant relationship between PROVINCE and WEEKEND_SERVICE.

In [21]: from scipy.stats import chi2_contingency

Perform a Chi-square test of independence
chi2, p, dof, expected = chi2_contingency(cross_tab)

chi2, p
```

```
Out[21]: (23.28521825612343, 1.396693110314945e-06)

The Chi-square test of independence returned a Chi-square statistic of 23.28521825612343 and a p-value of 1.396693110314945e-06. the p-value is very small (much less than 0.05), which provides strong evidence to reject the null hypothesis. Therefore, we would conclude that there is a significant relationship between the variables we tested.

Conclusion: Through our analysis, we uncovered several key findings. We found that the distribution of services is varied across different cities and provinces, with certain areas having a higher concentration of services. We identified the primary target audiences for these services, such as mental health and substance use services that cater to specific needs. We also observed different classifications of services, indicating the diverse range of support available.

Analyzing service availability revealed the operational hours of various services. We discovered services that are open for extended periods, including one service that operates 24/7. Furthermore, we found services that operate over the weekends, providing additional accessibility for individuals.

Finally, through text mining, we identified common words in service descriptions, highlighting the focus on health-related services, mental health, treatment, counseling, and support.

Overall, this analysis provides valuable insights into the distribution, audience, classification, availability, and common themes of services in the dataset. These findings can inform decision-making, resource allocation, and further investigation into specific areas of interest.

It is important to note that this analysis is based on the provided dataset and its limitations. Further research and validation may be necessary to draw more comprehensive conclusions.
